Based on the available data, nearly every country in Africa has received financial assistance from Europe and the United States through various aid programs, humanitarian assistance, and development projects. While complete, up-to-date country-by-country records for both donors are maintained on official aid tracking portals such as the US Foreign Assistance website and European aid dashboards[9], several sources confirm wide coverage of aid across Africa.

Key African countries documented as recipients of major aid flows from the US and Europe include:

- Ethiopia
- Sudan
- Democratic Republic of Congo
- Nigeria
- Somalia
- Kenya
- South Sudan
- Uganda
- Tanzania
- Mozambique
- Liberia
- Malawi

- Niger
- Zambia
- Morocco
- Senegal
- Egypt
- South Africa
- Sierra Leone
- Namibia
- Algeria
  These countries appear repeatedly as top recipients in international aid reporting and ODA statistics from both the US and Europe[135678].

Top U.S. recipients in recent years (with figures for 2025 where available):

- Ethiopia
- Sudan
- Democratic Republic of Congo
- Nigeria
- Somalia
- Kenya
- South Sudan

- Uganda
- Tanzania
- Mozambique[1310]

Major European donors (including the EU as a bloc and countries like Germany, France, UK, Sweden, Norway, and others) provide Official Development Assistance (ODA) to nearly every African country. Notably large sums go to:

- Morocco
- Mozambique
- Nigeria
- Niger
- Sierra Leone
- South Africa
- Somalia
- Sudan
- Ethiopia
- Senegal
- Namibia
- Angola
- Algeria[58]

Important notes:

- The actual list of countries is much longer, as virtually all African countries have received some form of aid from one or both donors in the past decade[8].

- Levels of aid and focus areas vary widely (from health and education to humanitarian relief).

- The US and Europe/EU are the largest bilateral and multilateral aid donors to Africa[5][6].
